Investment Risks

Any communications to you are not intended as an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any of these securities, or any securities offered by Prospuh. Investing in securities carries risk, including the loss of principal. Past performance is not indicative of future returns, which may vary. If in doubt, please seek independent professional advice.

The prices of securities can and do fluctuate, sometimes dramatically, and may become valueless. It is as likely that losses will be incurred rather than profit made as a result of buying and selling securities. Under certain market conditions you may find it difficult or impossible to liquidate a position.

Online trading has inherent risk due to system response, execution price, speed, liquidity, market data and access times that may vary due to market conditions, system performance, market volatility, size and type of order and other factors. These risks may increase in times of extreme market volatility. For more information, please read our market volatility disclosure. An investor should understand these and additional risks before trading.

The risks associated with investing in international securities, including US-listed stocks, American Depository Receipts (ADRs) and Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs) include, among others, country/political risk relating to the government in the home country; relatively unpredictable financial markets and economic growth patterns, exchange rate risk if the country's currency is devalued; and inflationary/purchasing power risks if the currency of the home country becomes less valuable as the general level of prices for goods and services rises. Before investing in an ETF, an investor should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges, and expenses of the investment company carefully.

Some securities products offered on the Prospuh app are over-the-counter (OTC) securities. OTC markets are electronic networks that allow two parties to trade with each other using a dealer as a middleman. They are known as dealer networks or markets. In contrast, stock exchanges are auction markets. A price for a security is posted, and then investors make offers for it, bidding against each other.

Companies that trade OTC are considered public. This means their stock can be openly bought and sold, but the securities are not listed on a major exchange such as the New York Stock Exchange or Nasdaq.

OTC securities have less liquidity than their exchange-traded peers, can have low trading volume, wider spreads between the bid price and the ask price, and limited publicly available information. This results in these securities being volatile investments that are usually speculative in nature. Additionally, due to the nature of the OTC marketplace and the characteristics of the companies that trade OTC, you should conduct thorough research before investing in these securities.

Tax Risks

You should understand the tax implications of entering into a transaction such as income tax, tax on dividends, or other withholdings tax. You should therefore consult your tax adviser to understand the relevant tax considerations as applicable to you.

Fees and charges

You should factor certain charges into your investment consideration. Your returns from a transaction may also be affected by transaction costs (i.e. fees and other charges) including but not limited to those charged by us and other parties.

Electronic Trading

Most trading facilities are supported by computer-based component systems for the order-routing, execution, matching, registration or clearing of trades. As with all facilities and systems, they are vulnerable to temporary disruption or failure.
